Alexandria Gazette W. A. Johnson & Co.,

TUFSDAY EVEN'G., DECEMBER 9.

A BRIDAL Hous -The following is a description of a bridal robe worn by a Philadelphia bride last weak: The robe was of cream-tinted white satin of the richest texture, with a silvery sheen. The front of the skirt was embroidered in pearls and white bugles, forming a large pyramid of flowers and leaves on either side of the lace, made to order in Brussels, which was arranged in jabota, each having in the centre a bouquet of waven orange blossoms. Bordering the lace was a vine embroidered in pearls and white bu, les, running perpendicularly from the bottem to the top. The train was very long and cut square; lace arranged in jabots trimmed its entire length at the back. The waist, which had sharp points back and front, was low neck, square, and trimmed with the same lace as the skirt, to represent a berthe. The deep border of the handkerchief was of exquisite lace. The fan had rainbow buid fine pearl sticks. The veil of tuile was unusually long, and was fastened to the head with waxen orange blessoms similar to these on the wast and skirt.

FEAR. - A man is just as much afraid of the things in which he does not believe as he is of those in which be does believe. No one believes in ghosts, and yet every one who goes through a dark room alone firmly expects one to each him and carry him off.
